BUSINESS INSIDER

These are the new NYC restaurants Wall Street should check out this fall

We've finally settled into fall and that means a slew of new restaurants in New York City. Of course, not all restaurants are created equal. Some restaurants are for Wall Street.

And others are bar/restaurant/coffee shops by 'Entourage' star Adrien Grenier where you can eat candied bacon quinoa sushi or a taco churro cannoli.

You can see how there's a difference.

With that in mind Business Insider has put together a list of restaurants to serve the Street.

Some of them are in key locations like Midtown or the Financial District, others look perfect for clients or a date night that will make you look in-the-know when it comes to the city's food scene.

You're welcome in advance.

BONUS: Primal Cut — 333 East 60th Street

This is a bonus because Primal Cut is located inside of a strip club, and Business Insider is a family site.

However, we know that on Wall Street one occasionally does find oneself inside a strip club, and as such it might be useful to know that there's a high-end steakhouse inside of one

The "one" is Sapphire Gentleman's Club, where chef Thomas Perone is revamping the menu completely. There's already buzz about the restaurant's carne asada. It's dry-aged New York Strip that's been marinated for 48-hours and is topped with chimichurri butter.

If you're looking for something more traditional Primal Cut is selling its Tomahawk Ribeye for two and lamb chop as all-stars on the menu.
